COMMANDER'S COMMENTS

Helping or Enabling?

If you've heard my Memorial Day speeches, you know that I talk about combat service members needing the day to remember our brothers & sisters who have fallen, to mourn, to remember. But, that the rest of the year, we need to earn the privilege of returning. But, what if someone has difficulty "returning"? There is a fine line between "helping" and "enabling" and we are faced with it often.

It is good press to do something "for veterans". But all too often it is making veterans more dependent on others, especially the government - and a perpetual, growing debtor government at that. Are we, as caring comrades, helping or hurting our friends? If you are wondering whether you are being helpful or enabling, ask yourself the following questions.

- Do you find yourself making excuses for someone else? "Oh, he was just sick today," "She meant to turn it in, but she was just too busy," "He was just blowing off some steam."
- Do you regularly put your own needs second because someone else needs your attention? This can be normal with a newborn, but in most instances is unhealthy.
- Do you have a feeling (or know full well) that the behavior you are seeing is unhealthy or irresponsible?
 Have you lied (or routinely lie) for someone?

If you have answered yes to any of these you may very well be enabling behaviors that need to change. It's not easy; but by doing so, you'll be making a true difference in your friend's life.

Until next month, Commander Doris Veterans Crisis Hotline: 1-800-273-8255

Still seeing the same faces at the meetings. Still seeing bodies on meeting nights that could easily stop in. Would love some input and new ideas from new people.

RIDERS NEWS

The twilight of the riding season is upon us, but the Riders are still keeping busy. Our OCW Poker Run netted a total of $4,500 so a big thank you to everyone participated! We still have a couple of activities left for the year so be on the lookout for it! We have moved our elections to the fall so nominations and elections are coming up in the next couple of months. We all hope that the cooler fall/ winter weather holds off a little longer so we can continue to ride, but if it comes, we will start planning next season.
